Concept Note

Background and Rationale:

In the contemporary global landscape, peacebuilding and statebuilding are critical processes for ensuring sustainable development, security, and governance. These processes involve not only addressing the immediate aftermath of conflict but also tackling deep-rooted structural issues such as nationalism, ethnicity, and democratization. Understanding the theoretical frameworks, historical evolution, and diverse models of peacebuilding is essential for policymakers, practitioners, scholars, and students who engage with post-conflict reconstruction and governance. Additionally, incorporating indigenous and regional perspectives, such as Indian theoretical traditions, enriches the discourse and practice of peacebuilding.

Objectives:

- To provide a comprehensive understanding of the concept and theories of peace.
- To trace the evolution of peacebuilding as both a concept and practical process.
- To explore theoretical approaches and models of peacebuilding in diverse contexts.
- To analyze the complex relationships between nationalism, territory, ethnicity, and statebuilding.
- To examine the roles of decolonization and democratization in shaping modern states.
- To introduce Indian theoretical traditions and practices in peacebuilding, highlighting local knowledge and approaches.
